ANTHONY SMITH

A fascination for Natural History has been the constant driving force in Anthony's life and career. Inspired by the works of Charles Darwin, he studied Zoology at the University of Cambridge, specialising in Animal Behaviour and Evolution. Upon graduating in 2005 he set up a sculpting studio for creating bronze wildlife and human figure sculptures.

Travel is an fundamental part of Anthony's work - only by observing animals in their natural habitat is he truly able to capture their essence. He travels all around the world observing and photographing wildlife, gathering inspiration for his work. In recent years he has spent many months in the Arctic and Antarctic observing an incredible range of birds and mammals.

BRONZE CASTING

Anthony casts his sculptures in bronze using the ancient process known as 'lost wax casting'. Together with a highly skilled foundry team, Anthony creates a mould of his original sculpture, which is used to produce a hollow wax replica. This wax sculpture is then carefully coated inside and out with a fireproof ceramic to be placed in an oven. The wax melts away and it is into this remaining space that the molten bronze is poured. Once the metal has cooled the ceramic is broken apart to reveal the sculpture. The bronze is then meticulously cleaned and prepared for the final stage – patination – the addition of colour through the application of heat and various chemicals. Finally, the bronze sculpture is complete.

These sculptures are all hand-made and Anthony works on every stage of production himself as well as overseeing the work of the foundry to ensure that every sculpture meets his high standards.

PATINAS

Anthony takes particular pride in his unique and highly diverse range of patinas. Each special colour palette is painstakingly developed and executed to compliment the form and texture of the sculpture, as well as highlighting aspects of the subject. Due to the complex, multi-stage process involved in creating these patinas, no two are ever exactly the same – each sculpture is therefore unique, with its own, distinct character.

COMMISSIONS

Anthony creates commissioned sculptures for private individuals as well as major public institutions. Clients include the Natural History Museum of London, Royal Amsterdam Zoo, the National Botanic Garden of Wales, University of Cambridge, Winchester College, and the Royal Mint. Limited edition works may also be commissioned – please feel free to contact Anthony for more information.

HRH Prince Philip unveiling Anthony's statue of the Young Charles Darwin at Christ's College, University of Cambridge.

Sir David Attenborough unveiling Anthony's statue of Alfred Russel Wallace at the Natural History Museum of London.

SCULPTING AT SEA

Anthony is a regular Guest Lecturer on cruise voyages all around the world during which he shares his knowledge and passion for sculpting and Art History.

During a cruise Anthony creates an original wildlife sculpture in clay. Through public demonstrations and lectures guests have the opportunity to learn about the sculpting and bronze casting process. Anthony then records the entire moulding and casting process for the new sculpture on his blog, enabling guests to follow the entire creative process, from the initial sculpture to the completed bronze.
